

Name: Pat Weisel Age: 84

What made the Festival memorable: Regular Festival-goer Pat Weisel was excited about the return of the Festival Village after a ten-year hiatus. The 84-year-old gamely walked up the ramp to attend the Village's opening show, When a Gray Taiwanese Cow Stretched and loved the novel outdoor experience, telling us she would be emailing all her friends to visit the Village.

Name: Low Wong Fook Age: 60s

What made the Festival memorable: Mr. Low stood in the rain for an hour listening to the broadcast of Rediffusion's Lei Dai Sor at the Festival Village. He brought his wife along when he visited the Festival Village the following day.

Name: Timothy de Geer

What made the Festival memorable: Mr. de Geer teaches English, French and Drama at Bandung International School in Indonesia. He led a group of 12 students and two of their guardians to see several shows at the Festival. This is the second year running he has organised this trip for his students.

Name: Jacob Joseph Maxson Age: 10

Occupation: Student, Anglo-Chinese School (Primary)

What made the Festival memorable: One of eight children selected to be on the first Kids Advisory Panel, Jacob has since seen his year-long labour of love come to fruition.

Name: Beatrice Chien Age: 70

What made the Festival memorable: A member of senior citizen performing arts group The Glowers, Beatrice was part of the Festival Community Tours, a series of travelling roadshows where customers at hawker centres around the island were given lessons on conversational Mandarin and dialects through the re-telling of radio stories and community songs.

Name: Krystal Kong Age: 23

What made the Festival memorable: Krystal was one of 11 local volunteer performers for the Festival's opening show, When A Gray Taiwanese Cow Stretched. After a week of intense rehearsals, she performed alongside seasoned performers and loved every minute of it.
